THE POSTAL NIGHT-BOX. Our readers will be pleased to learn that a night box on a totally new plan is to be fainter and fainter. Inde fitted at the Post-Office, whereby any accident by the overfilling of the allotted receptable will be avoided. The form of notification announcing this fact is, however, unusual, the Colonial Secretary having apparently usurped the functions of Postmaster General-on account, we presume, of the absence of the latter on leave. It is, of course, well that the functions so ably discharged by the official at the head of the Postal department should be delegated in the event of his absence or sickness to a competent hand; but putting aside His Excellency Sir Rich Donnell, C.B., has been pl the fact that there is, or should be, an the Honorable John Gardi assistant P. any official whose time is adequately employed in his present position should be left " to mind his own business." The night box is doubtless a usefu institution, but will probably be rendered almost supernumerary when the answer arrives to the Chamber of Commerce memorial on the subject of changing the hour of the mail's despatch. And this view of the case has doubtless prevented the expenditure of Colonial funds in the erection of a standing box in the building heretofore. However, if the Government think it necessary, the public will be only too pleased to have it, and we doubt not that, when the Postmaster General returns, he will be glad to find that his views have been carried out, without subjecting him to the chance of a refusal to provide what he deems necessary. His absences are, however, usually so short, that the Government would have shewn more courtesy in waiting for his return to allow the notion to be promulgated by the proper official, instead of casting additional trouble upon the hard-worked Colonial Secretary. THE LESMONA PIRACY. THE account given by the Captain of the Lesmona of the capture of his vessel quite exonerates him personally from any accusation of cowardice or inhumanity. The hoisting of lights as a signal to pirates is a very common trick amongst the native scoundrels who occasionally ship as "passengers" in sea going vessels. Our readers will probably recollect that the point of a story we recently quoted from an English Magazine, turned upon this truitorous proceeding. That the natives should have been left to take their own chance was therefore but natural.

There are, however, three of these gentry who escaped—two who went to Swatow, and one in hiding here. Just for one day we long for a touch of Chinese law in its merciless severity. Without doubt, these three survivors, could they be found, would, under the native system, suffer for the crime which justly or unjustly they may be assumed to have committed. The escape of these three alone is, at least, suspicious, and we may fairly assume that they had a hand in betraying the vessel. We trust that every effort will be made to hunt up the missing Cantonese. As to the crew, with one exception, that of H. Winter, they seem to have behaved in a despicably rests of ship-masters, cannot be punished

The author in his Preface says:—"The tables in Chap. VII., for estimating prices, measurement of goods, exchanges, &c. have been selected from those constantly in use among the foreign merchants in China. Those for calculating the prices of tea in dollars or pence have been copied from the more extended tables, by the kind permission of the author, P. Loureiro, Esq. The last section of the same chapter, on Movements in Bullion," has been prepared and furnished for the Guide by Patrick R. Harper, Esq., of the Commercial Bank of India at Hongkong, who has had much experience in the exchanges and movements of the precious metals in Eastern Asia.

"The Appendix of Sailing Directions has been reprinted from the China Pilot. With short interruptions, the coasts from Singapore to Hakodadi are all described in it; and for the Chinese coasts, the Directions have been improved by the insertion of the Chinese characters for the names of all places that could be ascertained."
